ABOUT

I got into video editing the way most people do, out of necessity and curiosity. I needed something done, figured out how to do it, and kept going from there. These days I handle the media and video production side of things at my school as Head of Media, which means I'm involved in pretty much everything from planning a shoot to exporting the final file. It's given me a lot of real experience managing the full process, not just sitting at a timeline.

On the freelance side, I've worked with clients on social media content, promotional videos, and various digital projects. The kind of work where you learn quickly that good communication matters just as much as knowing your way around Premiere Pro. I also do graphic design work and have a background in Photoshop, Illustrator, and Canva, which helps when a project needs more than just edited footage. I'm studying Information Systems at KLD and holding Dean's Lister standing, so the technical and systems-thinking side comes naturally to me as well.

WORK EXPERIENCE

Freelance Video Editor

Self-Employed | Remote

Ongoing

Most of my freelance work has come through word of mouth, which means keeping clients happy and delivering what you promised actually matters. I've worked on everything from short social media clips to longer promotional pieces, and I've learned to adapt depending on what the client actually needs versus what they think they need.

- Edited video content for clients across social media, promotional, and digital platforms, handling projects from raw footage to finished deliverable.
- Did color grading and color correction to keep the look consistent and on-brand across a client's content.
- Built motion graphics and animated elements in After Effects when a project needed more than just cuts and transitions.
- Juggled multiple projects at once without letting quality slip, something that took some adjustment early on but is second nature now.
- Handled client communication directly: intake calls, revision rounds, and final sign-off. Learned to manage expectations without over-promising.
- Used Photoshop and Lightroom for thumbnails, photo retouching, and any supplementary visual assets a project needed.

Tools used regularly:

Adobe Premiere Pro · After Effects · Photoshop · Lightroom · CapCut · Canva

Head of Media and Video Editing

Kolehiyo ng Lungsod ng Dasmariñas | Dasmariñas, Cavite

Academic / Leadership Role

This role is where I got comfortable with the production side of things beyond just editing. Being Head of Media means you're involved before the camera rolls and after the video goes live, pre-production planning, coordinating shoots, managing the team, and making sure the final output actually meets the institution's standards.

- Led the team through planning, filming, editing, and publishing video content for school events and institutional communications.
- Managed the full production lifecycle end-to-end, from early storyboards and shot lists through to color-graded, exported finals.
- Set up a proper file organization and encoding system for the team, something that didn't exist before and made handoffs a lot cleaner.
- Worked with faculty, student orgs, and admin to produce content that actually served the school's communication needs, not just looked good.

- Helped less experienced team members get up to speed on editing techniques and software, mostly by working alongside them rather than just explaining.
- Kept the visual branding consistent across all published content, which matters more than people realize when you're producing for an institution.
